Spread Happiness, not Scars

(To help our SHEROES---Acid attack survivors)

Around the world 1500 people report Acid attacks each year. Many more go unreported. The vast majority of victims are women.

Acid corrodes gently. Eating away at her skin, bones and her dreams. The rest of her life begins now. A battle against unending, excruciating pain, deformity, social negligence and an invisible justice system. When a girl is attacked by acid, she is also relegated to the fringes of society, consigned to its dark recesses.

So we at JMIS organized a talk of our students of classes XI and XII with one of acid attack survivor Ms Ritu (an active member of Chanv foundation)

Chanv works as a bridge between survivors and the society .It is a life line for survivors, run and managed by fellow survivors. It is here that their painful past transforms into a fountain of strength for their fellows. Not only do they understand each other, they also become a beacon of hope for each other.

Ms Ritu discussed all her experiences after being attacked and how society dealt with it. While listening her all students and teachers present there can sense goose bumps and had tears in their eyes. Students also asked questions to her which she answered with full confidence. Students got so much of her confidence and also realized that life never stops. It's we who make small hurdles of life so big. After talking to such an inspirational person all our students stood and promised to fight with any kind of difficulty with full courage and confidence.

This talk proved a great achievement in making students empathized for the survivors as well as understand that if we wish we can also bring a change as it is very well said that every single
